

Cemetery feeling effects of age

Century-old headstones are falling, but little has been done to fix problem

A lot of history rests at the Wheeling Cemetery, and some of it is fading and crumbling away.

The cemetery's oldest section — that in the northeast corner closest to Dundee Road — is littered with more than a dozen monuments lying face down, broken at the top or tipped over from old age. Some are tossed in a pile near a bush.

Most of these monuments mark the resting place of those who died in the mid-19th century — in some cases more than 40 years before Wheeling was incorporated as a village in 1894. Other neglected monuments date to the 1920s.

Members of the Wheeling Historical Society have asked village officials to repair the gravestones, but little has been done.

"We go back and forth," said Linda Reading, curator of the Wheeling Historical Museum. "It needs to be repaired and taken care of, or it will be destroyed."

the monuments on Halloween more than two years ago, an incident, Reading said, that prompted discussions about repairing other aging stones. Reading said village officials cite the costs involved of the repairs, and have put them off.

Reading said the society has offered to help the village repair the stones, even if it means using volunteers to do it. The Knopf Cemetery in Buffalo Grove cemetery was repaired with the help of volunteers.

"I know it can be done," Reading said.

Tony Altieri, commander of AMVETS Post 66 in Wheeling, said he, too, would like to see a restoration of the cemetery. He said perhaps some of the monuments beyond repair could be replaced with stones similar in style, while others could be fixed.

However, his efforts, also have been stymied by the costs of the endeavor.

"People keep saying it's expensive, but I can never get a figure," he said. "How expensive is expensive? Maybe we can narrow it down and see what we can do."

Altieri said the post may be able to donate some money to the project. But he also noted the Knopf Cemetery repair.

And he is hopeful a volunteer effort could take over if the money does not come through.

"Right now, I'm not sure where to go (for help)," he said.

Chuck Spratt, director of Wheeling's Public Works Department, said his department is responsible for the maintenance of the cemetery, including the maintenance of the monuments. He said he would like to do more for the cemetery, but most of the department's budget is tied up with capital improvement projects like water main replacements, road repairs and sidewalk replacements.

Spratt said the department spent about $40,000 in spring 2003 to repair the 30 gravestones damaged by the Halloween vandalism. The department, however, has been unable to work on the neglected monuments. And no one, including Spratt, knows what reversing the neglect would cost.

"We do our best with the budget we have," he said. "It's a nice, old cemetery and there's a lot of history there. We try to make it look nice."

Wheeling tries to fill holes in cemetery's records

By Gray Megan
SPECIAL TO THE TRIBUNE
July 8, 2009

A few monuments have fallen. Some markers are cracked, tilted or sunk in the ground they have occupied since before the Civil War.

But the grass is carefully mowed, the trees are trimmed and Wheeling Cemetery looks ready to receive its next burial.

Ready, that is, if Wheeling officials knew how many plots are available, their exact location and how much they cost.

Assistant Village Manager Jon Sfondilis is working to answer those questions so the village can put to use the cemetery it spends roughly $8,000 a year to maintain in working condition. "It's an active project, but I can't say when it will be completed," he said.

The cemetery, south of Dundee Road and just east of Wolf Road, was established in the 1800s and marble markers from the early 1840s are still visible.

Village Manager J. Mark Rooney told trustees at a recent workshop that although Wheeling took over care and operation of the cemetery in 1976, it has never sold a plot there.

Estimates on available plots range from 12 to 40, although some of those may belong to families who plan to use them, officials said.

"Our concern is that there may be burials not marked," Sfondilis said.

The cemetery was run by the Wheeling Cemetery Association until 1976, when the cemetery and about $10,000 in association funds were transferred to the village. Local funeral home owner Louis Kolssak II has been involved in the cemetery on an informal basis but says the village has all the records.

"I turned everything over to them," Kolssak said. "We've had one burial [there] in the last four or five years."

Kolssak said the records show who is buried there and where; the village isn't sure those records are complete and is working to update them, officials said.

Wheeling is not the only town in the cemetery business. "We have two we took over," said Paul Risinger, general operations superintendent for neighboring Northbrook. Risinger said the village took over the North Northfield Cemetery in 2004 and the Northfield Union Cemetery in 2006. "Both date back to the 1830s," he said.

In Wheeling, a number of former village residents and family members of some of those buried in the cemetery have called with information, Sfondilis said. He's hopeful more people with information about plots come forward to help sort out things out.
